Call for Papers (Students' Presentation)

Concept Note

Women's movement in India is multi-faceted. Over the years, women's organisations have not only voiced their political, social and economic rights but also established the fact that her marginality, silence and struggle are political. Patriarchal domination and gender hierarchy both are in place and it has been a continuous process on their part to negotiate with the state and society. Women's movements have not only remained rights-based but also located the issues that shape their lived experiences. The past and present of the movement have travelled a turbulent road; their demands for rights, protests against sexual violence, workplace harassment, neo-liberal development policies, human rights violations and everyday misogyny have not only captured our attention but also made us more conscious about our locations and rights.

In this context, the students' group seminar shall try to look into changing nature and various dimensions of women's movement in India.

Sub themes are indicative but not exhaustive:

- 1. Women's Movements
2. Gender and Human Rights
- 3. Violence against Women
4. Women, Environment and Development
- 5. Women, State and Politics
